- Please note language is not an issue – any level of English or none will be fine.

Please email info@dasharts.org.uk to register your interest with a statement of interest and a CV or summary of past performance and training experience. If possible please also attach a photograph.

We may then ask you to meet with us either over the phone or in person.

ABOUT THE WORKSHOP

On Monday 23rd and Tuesday 24th September, Dash Arts will offer an unmissable artistic opportunity exploring theatre in the unique Dash Arts style – across art-forms, languages and cultural backgrounds, as an introduction to our approach of adaptation and creation.

We will offer this workshop free of charge for selected and invited actors.

Participants will work with Dash Arts' TransNationalTheatre Director Tim Supple and dramaturg Katie Ebner-Landy to investigate material in search of the essence of a shared European identity. The workshops with theatre artists in London will be followed by workshops in other UK and continental cities, as a first step to creating a trans-European, multi-lingual production that dramatizes the story of European unification – its myths and realities.

The workshops will be a collective, physical, playful and instructive sharing of skills and experience. We will end the sessions with a public sharing of excerpts generated by the workshop at Rich Mix on Wednesday 25th September.

The Workshops will run on Monday 23rd and Tuesday 24th September from 10am-6pm at the Young Vic on The Cut. We may invite you to attend all or part of the 2-day timeframe.

TIM SUPPLE is a world-leading director who has created theatre throughout the UK and in Europe, North and South America, Australia, India, North Africa and the near and far East. In the UK he has worked regularly at the National Theatre and the RSC and was Artistic Director of Young Vic Theatre, 1992-2001. His most recent production was Shakespeare's Tempest in Mandarin for Beijing NCPA.

Since 2005, as Co-artistic Director of Dash Arts and independently, Tim has developed an expert understanding of theatre outside the UK, working in over 30 countries. He aims to bring the richness of the world’s theatre to UK audiences, artists and students in transnational, cross-cultural and multi-lingual productions. Examples of this work include: pan-Indian A Midsummer Night’s Dream (2006-2008); pan-Arabic One Thousand and One Nights (2011); cross-cultural UK As You Like It (2009), and Freedom on the Tyne (2017): an epic dramatisation of historic civil rights battles performed by international artists with local participants on Newcastle’s Tyne Bridge. He has been described as “the leading storyteller in British Theatre” (Financial Times).

KATIE EBNER-LANDY holds an Arts and Humanities Research Fellowship from Queen Mary University of London. Her research focuses on the role of European theatre in the making of the early modern state. She has worked as dramaturg and adapter of theatre in a range of languages and places – in the United Kingdom, France, China, Japan, South Korea, Mexico, India and the Middle East. Recent productions include dramaturgy for Tim Supple’s production of The Tempest in Beijing (2018), dramaturgy and adaptation of the four verbatim plays of Freedom on the Tyne (2017), and dramaturgy and translation for Il ritorno d’Ulisse in patria at Grange Opera Festival (2017). She has worked as a dramaturg for new work at London’s Finborough Theatre and Arcola Theatre and in 2017 she was chosen as a script judge for the Papatango New Writing Prize.

The Myths of Europe Project is part of Dash Arts current series of work, EUTOPIA, exploring what Europe means and what it means to be European.

EUTOPIA is an integrated programme of work encompassing everything from large-scale productions to more intimate events where audiences, artists and participants meet in different ways. Working with UK and international partnerships with arts organisations and universities, our aim is to take audiences to the heart of Europe in all its complexity; confronting generalisation with new insight and fierce debate.

It will ask and unpack the vital questions we all have about how we got here, what this means and how it will affect our lives. Our events in the series will also ask challenging questions of artists, audiences, academics and writers from across Europe about European identity, migration and its impact, the future of free movement and cultural understanding.
